MINIT

JULEP

drumroll.....

ta dah! this is my new zine one mint julep. my other zine = picklejar which i do with la eev and i will still be doing until she goes away to school and i stay here for school...

i'm a callin' it what i'm it's spring and julep's summer kind of drink, slightly intoxicating. a good mint julep woul erase to some extent just the arrival of spring is a good upper)...it's all on my own for anyway, i'm used to ya like it callin it because a real spring and sweet and cool and I kinda feel like a my problems (though only one mint julep cuz i'm the first time (zinewise solitary existance) i hope

quiet...class

I've been inwardly seething lately about classism (yeah and i know you wanna hear about it too) and how fucked up it is that it remains an "acceptable prejudice" in middle and upper class liberal (and radical) politics. I ~~don't~~ don't really know how to call people on it cuz it's so accepted.

What kills me is to hear someone who sees themselves as completely free of prejudice (cuz they're liberal, right, y'know i bet some of their best friends are something...) be all like "yeah man, it's like, everyone there is ~~white trash~~ white trash," or "yeah I visited xyz university and it's a cool school but they're all fuckin' hicks," or whatever it is they wanna say about rednecks.

mostly the folks who talk this shit are fairly well-off, northern (or that's how they see themselves) and the folks who it gets talked about are generally poor and southern.

i don't need to hear another joke about west
virginia...

yeah it's just fuckin' great that there are all these judgements that get put on people for being poor (like you know, all that trash is racist, violent, drunk, abusive, stupid, sexist. y'know, problems that don't occur anywhere but where there are poor people i'm so sure...) and clearly if someone does actually fit some of this stereotype it's clearly their income that they should have to take shit for.

All the open prejudice of the right wing doesn't piss me off as much because no one there is pretending to be so good hearted.

People also like to pull this whole pity thing to cover up their classism, by saying basically "you suck, but it's not your fault because you didn't have an education, but you still suck." They of course mean you weren't educated like me.

A note on language: ~~white trash~~ think of the racial implications of "white trash." Doesn't the fact that you have to describe the person as white imply that you don't think trash is usually white, that that is a role for other races and white people who are "trash" have sunk beneath their position.
Just something to think about...

I don't know, this isn't meant to be a big preachy thing (i am or have been guilty of every prejudice i described here) or like some call for everyone to just get along but i guess people need to think about what they really mean before they fuck with other people...

This is also not just me being PC (which i think was designed so people could linguistically sidestep their own prejudices by making it look like they'd really given issues some thought. not that it's bad to be nice, but it's better to mean it.)

real people = real lives = me real mad =

you are not so cool mad =

you are not
so cool

(sorry, this is really ramby but it's hard for me to keep cool and analytical being so tremendously pissed off and all.)

it's 3 am and i don't know where the kids are after the bikini kill show in february which was musically fly ('cept team dresch whose set i was outside for) i'm wondering where are all the rad punk kids. [REDACTED] I had this night of "wow cute boy...wow cute girl...wow, is that a boy or a girl, and which is it cuter as" and also a night of this feels like something is really happening here and i'm not a part of it. it's not that i felt excluded by a really grrrl positive show, i think there should be more of them. more i felt like here's this huge punk show where clearly real shit is being talked about and yet everyone here is so isolated from one another. like there is all this communication from the stage to the audience and none within the audience. i also was kind of sad to think that there are all these kids here for one show so why don't i ever see them at other shows? was it just music people came for? i was really upset to see people talking loudly through both of the films on sex workers that seemed to be such a big part of the point of having a benefit for HIPS (helping individual prostitutes survive). i'm not blaming the bands or hips or positive force cause they set up a fine show but it was one that disappointed me. maybe i was expecting too much.

where are all the queer punk boys?

another side of this [REDACTED] is that i wondered why there aren't more visibly queer punk boys. i think that especially through riot grrrl and bikini kill and team dresch and a million other bands that queer girls have become a

why am i so lonely?

tremendously visible part of the punk scene in the last few years. that's really cool and all but why am i so tired?

but i still feel like nothing's happened so far to connect queer punk boys (at least not in DC) or queer punks in groups that are not exclusive by sex. i guess there's pansy division (little help since they bore hell out of me) and mukilteo fairies who kick ass but i need backup i need company they are broken up and so far away... maybe then the message for this page should just be "DC queer punks unite, smash the state and then party after, yeah."

i need to be inspired c'mon, it's so lonesome up here on beacon hill...

I know I can't be the only whatever-i-am in the room what these last two pages come from in slightly more organized terms is just i wish that there were more kids out there doing stuff, making themselves known and communicating on a real level. i fear that many who have taken up the reins of DIY (zinesters, especially) have done it for no real reason other than to do it, which would be fine if they could find something to say.

but i do get tired of zines that are ten pages of really boring rants on how quirky mr/miss
j. random zine writer is. i'm frustrated that in media that exist largely to decentralize information (zines, punk rock etc.) i have to wade through a lot of shit to find the stuff that lives up to the DIY ethic.

READING ZINES = CRIMINAL CONSPIRACY

to write in code so dense that parents teachers and friends cannot read it unless you so desire

to look blankly into the face of authority, slingshot in hand, broken glass in pants cuffs, and blow a big sticky grape bubble (smack that fucker loud)

to bleed all over the official documents that say you need to be qualified and expert in this and this and know five million other useless things just to be someone (those who fear blood may spit)

to drink lemonade in the sun as an act of rebellion

to flout the value placed on intellectualism
and formal education

so why are so many zines so fucking boring... c'mon, just a little bit of soul now yeah, there are problems here but don't think by walking north you'll enter the promised land. there are no geographical escape routes

now. and some of us would rather fight our battles here than fight the same ones at higher Latitudes. up on a map does not = the moral high ground, it's just out of the frying pan and into the fire.

goodbye, i hope you liked this zine even though my thoughts are a bit vague and my writing is a bit rickety...

i don't know if i can revise any of this to make it clear because sometimes things can't be laid out so thin or i don't know how. write if you think this sucks because i want to know what i may have fucked up and anyway, what's the point of this if not communication...

of course you can write if you like this too, or if you want my other zine, "picklejar" (send stamps, it's free),
